All your money controlled forever

'DIGITAL POUND' SPELLS END OF FREEDOM

THE banks will sell it as safe, convenient and the logical next step, but central bank digital currency (CBDC) is about completely controlling your finances, therefore controlling your life, and everyone else's.

The 'digital pound' will be very different from the cards and payment apps you use today. This 'smart' money will be programmable, so they will be able to restrict how you use it, or even switch it off altogether. It is the tyrant's ultimate dream - once they control everyone's money, they can make you do what they want, or restrict you from anything or anywhere at the stroke of a key. No one will be able to save or plan for the future, and we will, in effect, be slaves.

But there is a simple way to counter it and stop it being implemented, because they can never overtly state what CBDC is really for. They will say: 'most people are paying electronically now anyway, and digital currency will make things safer, easier and more convenient.'

So to prevent it, use cash - everywhere, all of the time. Use ATMs and (if you still have one) bank branches to withdraw cash, and don't use pay apps or cards if possible. Refuse to go into businesses that don't accept cash, and support the ones that do. Cash is freedom. See centre pages.

Time to examine what we have always believed

by DARREN SMITH

IF you've ever felt like something just isn't quite right with the world, your instincts are correct.

You've been hoodwinked all your life, as has the rest of the world, and that includes yours and everyone's parents, and every generation going back for centuries.

How would you know if you were being deceived, if everyone else around you is also deceived, and all of the information we ever receive is from the deceivers?

Because of our in-built respect for authority, they can get us to believe anything, so that today we have no clue who we are, what we are capable of, or what the truth looks like. Here's a clue: normally it's hidden, vilified by the world, or called a conspiracy theory.

There are certain things we can know for sure, without reliance on anyone telling us; but almost everything else that we believe is given to us by those who fully own and control education, media and government at all levels.

How can we rely on this information if we know many of these institutions are corrupt, and self-gain is worth more to those in its upper echelons than the integrity of the truth?

The answer is you shouldn't - not a bit of it. Unless you can verify something with your own senses, or by using research and logical reasoning, then you should regard it with a very healthy suspicion.

People should know how much language controls thought; which is why language is being manipulated all the time, to restrict and direct your thoughts into being a docile, obedient worker, happy with your lot in life and never refusing any request.

The system is designed to keep you in it, and to keep you from ever questioning why it is there in the first place. It keeps you running on the treadmill of work, bills and whatever escapes you choose, and it is very successful at appearing to be beneficial; all the while robbing people blind and having them accept it as the best we can do.

But calls for the destruction of the system are misguided. We do need a system; just an open, transparent and truthful one that provides a backbone to the rule of law, and arranges what needs to be done quickly, efficiently and without extorting anyone. Peaceful non-compliance has always been the way for those of a nobler spirit. Interested in far more than material gains, we want to see gains in consciousness, love and understanding, for ourselves and for everyone around us.

The rulers, in contrast, give young people especially almost no chance of developing themselves properly, with all manner of tactics being used, including the dumbed down education system, movies, pop music, video games, sex, and then of course, alcohol and drugs.

Gary Webb was the famous journalist who exposed the CIA's drug-running operation from Mexico and South America in the 1970s, and paid for it with his life. A war on drugs - when they're bringing them in?

We've been deceived, played, hoodwinked, had over - we might be smart, but we're only smart in following what they want us to do in their world. So we know how to operate a machine, or manage people, or design and build a project, but our beliefs are narrow, short-term and riddled with self-doubt.

It may be time to take charge of your thoughts and beliefs, and do a full analysis of everything you believe to be true but have never actually verified for yourself.

Sometimes, it is fear that can stop people from doing such a thorough internal examination of where all of their beliefs come from, because, if your suspicions are correct, you will probably have to change a lot about your life, and you might be quite happy and comfortable with how everything is going right now.

The search for truth is often chased out of us at some point in the past; if not at school, then in the adult world of work, where everyone has accepted their lot, creating more influential social engineering of passivity and acceptance.

Intelligence and curiosity are often mocked, and therefore repressed. Imagine if we just let people follow their hearts, and develop their natural skills, instead of trying to find a use for them?

Everything is a lie told for an agenda, where normally the messenger often has no idea it is a lie, and will often defend it vigorously as the truth - as would any good agent or representative - without thinking whether what they are saying is actually, verifiably, undeniably true.

It has a lot to do with our first-received information - we tend to cherish that which was first taught to us to help make sense of the world, and it is hard to reform this initial mould, which is why we should teach children not just good manners and their ABCs, but the truth of the world - how it really operates - and their potential place in it (but not of it). Compare and contrast, use critical thinking, and be wary of sources, especially from a unified, banker-owned media and education system.

It requires humility and courage to admit we were duped, and to begin to piece together the truth of the world, along with our place in it. Many people feel we're at a significant moment in history, and we may well see the most amazing things, but we should also think about how we can direct our own lives in truth, and therefore make every effort to become what we want to be, starting with what we truly know, observe and believe about the world.

It is truly liberating.

Alarming vaccine safety signals revealed by Yellow Card data

'No question that the mRNA vaccines should be withdrawn with immediate effect'

Health regulator failing to keep public protected from mRNA shots

IN the UK, three covid-19 vaccines - AstraZeneca (AZ), Pfizer (PF) and Moderna (MO) - have been used in a nationwide inoculation programme aimed at preventing harm from the so-called SARS-CoV2 virus.

At the time of their introduction, the vaccines lacked any long-term safety data, and required Conditional Marketing Authorisation from the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA).

To monitor safety, the MHRA established the covid-19 vaccine Yellow Card reporting scheme. In its weekly summaries of the Yellow Card data, the MHRA has reassured us that the vaccines posed no serious safety concerns.

However, an independent analysis of the accumulated Yellow Card data, finally released 18 months after the first Freedom of Information (FOI) request, shows unequivocal safety signals linking the mRNA vaccines to serious damage to the lymph system, the heart and female reproduction.

Nearly half a million Yellow Card reports have now been filed, documenting suspected adverse events to the covid-19 vaccines (about one per hundred recipients). In its published summaries, the MHRA repeatedly discourages the use of this data for estimating rates of adverse reactions, or for comparing the safety of the different vaccines.

Its reason is that the information is not gathered by systematically following the health of matched populations of unvaccinated and unvaccinated individuals,

by PROFESSOR RICHARD ENNOS

but instead relies on passive reporting from physicians or patients themselves.

The data indicates that the rate of reporting of serious and fatal adverse events is nearly three times higher for the AZ vaccine (3,912 serious or fatal reaction reports per thousand doses) than for either of the Pfizer or Moderna mRNA vaccines (1,341 and 1,344 serious or fatal reaction reports per thousand doses respectively).

Although there has been no formal withdrawal of the AZ vaccine by MHRA, its use has effectively been discontinued, perhaps because of this worrying safety signal.

A well-established protocol, known as proportional reporting rate analysis (PRR) has been devised for detecting safety signals, using passive reporting data such as those collected by the covid-19 Yellow Card scheme.

The vast majority of these severe adverse reactions affect the lymph system, and yet the MHRA fails to mention any possible adverse effects of the mRNA vaccines on the lymph system.

When PRR analysis is applied to investigate possible adverse effects of PF vaccination on the heart, there is a clear and significant safety signal for younger males, and to a lesser extent with older females.

The MHRA has conceded in its Yellow Card summary: "There has been a consistent pattern of higher reporting of these suspected events (myocarditis and pericarditis) with both the monovalent covid-19 vaccine Pfizer/BioNTech and covid-19 vaccine Moderna, and of these occurring more frequently in males."

However, its response to the high number of reports of myocarditis and pericarditis following mRNA vaccination has not been to withdraw the offending products, but merely to alter the safety information associated with these products, and alert health professionals to look out for these very serious adverse events after the relevant vaccines have been administered.

An independent analysis of the accumulated Yellow Card data, finally released 18 months after the first FOI request, shows unequivocal safety signals linking the mRNA vaccines to serious damage to the lymph system, the heart and female reproduction

For Pfizer, there are significant safety signals in age groups 10 through 40, while for Moderna, a formal safety signal is only found in the youngest (10 to 20 year) age groups.

The vast majority of the adverse event reports for female reproduction involve disruption to the menstrual cycle, and excessive menstrual bleeding. Again, these have been recognised by MHRA as side-effects: "Evidence from the most recent review suggested a possible association between the Pfizer and Moderna covid-19 vaccines and heavy menstrual bleeding... the product information for the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines is therefore being updated to add heavy menstrual bleeding as a possible side effect."

By applying PRR methodology, it is possible to use the passively reported Yellow Card data to detect and quantify safety signals for novel vaccines. And the mRNA covid-19 vaccines do not appear to be safe. Glaring safety signals are apparent, indicating harm to the lymph system, the heart and to female reproduction.

There can be no question that the mRNA vaccines should be withdrawn with immediate effect. The final conclusion is that the MHRA has provided no protection to the UK public from the adverse effects of the novel covid-19 vaccines. Its regular summary of Yellow Card data has been an exercise in defending the covid-19 vaccines from criticism, rather than defending the UK public.

Its reports lack any scientific rigour, include not a single piece of statistical analysis to support the conclusions drawn, and are an affront to the huge number of individuals who have been injured or killed doing what they believed to be 'the right thing'.

British jury concluded taxes may have funded 7/7

Reasonable cause to suspect it was a 'false flag' attack

by TONY ROOKE

WHEN an operative at the UK's National Anti-Terror Hotline tells you that you have got reasonable cause to suspect that this country's biggest terror attack - 7/7 - was an inside job, then it is time to rethink your tax affairs.

On August 9 of last year, that's exactly what I was told after I called the national hotline where you are supposed to report concerns over that kind of thing.

I had been making a film about my current court battle with Chichester District Council, which, every year, had sent some of my council tax to the Consolidated Fund of Her Majesty's Treasury.

That money is then disseminated to, amongst others, our security services; the very same services which, on May 12, 2011, a British jury concluded were feasibly involved in the planning and bombing of the tube trains and bus on July 7, 2005.

I have been withholding my council tax for a long time because, in the course of my research, I had discovered the little-known case of Regina v Anthony John Hill at Southwark Crown Court.

Mr Hill stood charged on two counts of attempting to pervert the course of justice by allegedly sending copies of his film, 7/7 Ripple Effect, to the judge and jury of a trial in 2008, where three Muslim men stood charged of assisting the alleged London bombers.

He had also sent the film to a victim's family member. Mr Hill's motive? To prevent a miscarriage of justice, and to alert the family member to factors pointing towards direct state complicity in the murder of their loved one. For this, he was extradited from his home in Ireland, placed in custody for 150 days, before standing trial on May 9, 2011.

Just 72 hours prior to Mr Hill taking his seat in the dock, the UK mainstream media would splash the main findings of HM Government's official narrative all over our televisions and papers.

This was authored by Coroner Heather Hallett, and the product of the Blair administration's first over 700 others - solely to persuade a reluctant nation to support war in the Middle East - would not pervert the course of justice if shown at another legal proceeding. Sections 15 & 17 of the Terrorism major 'investigation' conducted under the much maligned Inquiries Act, brought into being just three months before the awful events of July 7.

Anthony John Hill's film, 7/7 Ripple Effect

This is an Act decried by many legal bodies, such as Amnesty International, which said: "The final report of any inquiry under the Act would be published at the executive's discretion and crucial evidence could be omitted at the executive's discretion."

Indeed, many 7/7 victim family members would campaign for a full six years before abandoning their attempts to secure a truly independent inquiry into that awful morning.

After four days of cross-examination by a tax-funded prosecution team, with the official narrative doubtless still fresh in the jury's minds after the publicity of the previous days, they returned what could be the most important verdict in UK British legal history.

By majority verdict, and to the requisite measure of beyond reasonable doubt, at least 10 of your peers concluded that Mr Hill's evidences and assertions that the British establishment had bombed and murdered nearly 60 souls and maimed Act 2000 state that if you have reasonable cause to suspect monies you are paying or being asked to pay have, and may again, be used for terrorist purposes, it is a serious crime for you to hand over those monies.

I'm not sure my new friend at the Anti-Terror Hotline thought about that when he agreed the Hill verdict gave us all reasonable cause to suspect 7/7 was a false flag attack.

If you are a UK taxpayer, you have got reasonable cause to suspect that your hard-earned wages, which you then hand over to HM Revenue & Customs and your local council, helped fund 7/7. And thanks to our bent media, our cowed police, and our corrupt MPs, you will continue to fund terrorism for as long as you fail to object or at least try.

MP slandered for exposing the truth

by JAYMIE ICKE

LAST month MP Andrew Bridgen made a stand and said what needed saying.

By doing so, he made himself plenty of enemies within the Conservative Party; but is there something more behind why they have gone for him so heavily?

Of course, there is.

When it's all stripped back, the likes of Matt Hancock and others are playground bullies, cowards and pathetic excuses for human beings.

There's one thing that people like that cannot stand more than anything else, and that's someone standing up to them. Someone who has the courage to call them out for their behaviour.

Now please don't read this as my endorsement of Andrew Bridgen; I don't know enough about his background, his voting record, or his connections to make a rounded judgment. However, on this particular subject, he's been superb.

Since the rollout of the vaccine in late 2020, the number of adverse reactions and side effects has been clear to see. Hundreds of thousands of cases have been reported on the UK's Yellow Card reporting scheme. Most countries have a similar scheme, and the numbers are scary in any direction you look.

Products have been taken off the market, never to be seen again, for a fraction of the side effects that this one has had, so that should naturally lead you to the question of why this is being allowed to happen.

Why have so few spoken out when the evidence of the dangers of the mRNA shots is so clear to see?

Almost everyone knows someone who has had a negative side effect of the vaccine, whether that's minor or major. I know of people who have ended up with things like heart surgery, developed cancer soon after being injected, had vision problems, memory problems, and much more since getting the shot.

A friend of mine who ended up with heart issues requiring surgery, developed symptoms just hours after receiving the jab. A terrifying experience for him, and one I would not wish on anyone.

Andrew Bridgen has shown why so many are scared to speak out; because the establishment as a whole will come and attack you in any way it can.

The likes of Hancock and others are terrified that this questioning of the narrative, and inevitably the questioning of them as people, will grow to the point where what I say about his belonging behind bars becomes a very real possibility. They know what they have done and are doing - they've got blood on their hands. None of them would ever see daylight again, and I for one cannot wait until that day comes.

And trust me, it is coming. As the saying goes: 'everything will be alright in the end, and if it's not alright, then it's not the end'. The end of this story involves all of these villains behind bars for a long time for their crimes against humanity.

Well done to Andrew Bridgen for standing up; we need millions more across the world to do the same, and to ignore the abuse and ridicule that the establishment gives you back.

Reaching people on the street

by PAUL EDWARDS

Even being rejected as 'anti-vax' is useful

AS anybody knows, if they have tried to explain to a disapproving family member why they have not had the vaccine, people do not want to listen to rational arguments.

They have made up their minds, and regard people who want to preserve our freedoms as selfish and dangerous anti-vaxxers. They have been brainwashed by constant fear propaganda, and stopped from seeing the counter-arguments by censorship.

The propaganda they use is based on psychological 'nudge' techniques, as recommended by the behavioural scientists that sit on the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE) in the UK, and equivalent advisory bodies in other countries.

To counter the psychological manipulation, we must use psychological messaging of our own. They control the media, so we must reach people directly as they go about their business in the open. That means methods like fly posting, handing out leaflets, wearing T-shirts with messages, and talking to people face-to-face in the street.

When you talk to someone you know well, the approach is very different to talking to a stranger. There is history between you, they know your strengths and weaknesses, and there is emotional baggage in the form of lingering resentments for past injuries caused, as well as any love and respect they have for you. If you broach a difficult subject with them, you can expect a long conversation and follow-up conversations. In fact, a whole series of conversations, unless you fall out with them so badly about it that you can't talk about it with them again.

The difference is that you do not aim to have deep, meaningful conversations on the street. Especially with people who have indicated to you that they disagree with you. Quite the opposite: you need to keep the conversation short, and agree to disagree as soon as possible.

The reason you are on the street handing out leaflets is not to convert people to your cause; if you try that, you will fail spectacularly.

The reason for being on the street is, first and foremost, to show yourself, and to show that you are opposing the taking away of your freedoms. By showing yourself in this way, you are sending a powerful psychological message to everyone who sees you. That is enough to aim for.

Rational argument does not work with people, because they have become attached to the ideas implanted by the propaganda at an emotional level. To combat this, we need to meet them on the streets face-to-face, because every actual encounter with another human being involves emotion. Simply by appearing in front of them and making known your opposition, you are sending a psychological message.

Even though in their rational brain they are telling themselves,

'I disagree with this', in their emotional brain, they are experiencing fear and confusion, because they are encountering a message which is at odds with their newly established version of reality.

All the repeated messages of the propaganda, and the psychological programming cleverly designed by the behavioural scientists have established in this person the idea that all sensible people are 'following the science'.

Now they are encountering a person who isn't. This hits them emotionally. That is why people often get tetchy, and make the 'anti-vaxxer' comment. It is a knee-jerk emotional reaction. Once that reaction is invoked, the emotional brain tells the rational brain to regard me as an enemy and block me. So it is impossible to have a meaningful conversation with the person. This would be very bad if I was aiming to convert them to my cause, but I am not. I have already delivered the psychological message that, because it is at the emotional level, cannot be stopped by the rational brain - it always gets through.

The reason the person will have even stopped when encountering me is that as I offered them the leaflet, I was friendly and smiling, so they paid attention to me. Then their curiosity was piqued when they noticed there was a message on my T-shirt. There is a feeling of cognitive dissonance being invoked in them, because they already suspect that I am an anti-vaxxer, but I seem normal and friendly, which is contrary to the caricature that has been implanted by the propaganda. They take the time to read the message because they want to confirm that I actually am an anti-vaxxer. Having done so, they have received the psychological message about the existence of opposition, and helplessly reacted in the knee-jerk manner invoked in their emotional brain. Their reaction is the attempt by their hijacked thought processes to maintain their sense of self by resolving the cognitive dissonance. If I react to their comment by appearing offended by it, or making a comment back, they will be able to resolve their cognitive dissonance by confirming to themselves that 'anti-vaxxers' are indeed nasty people. It will be a relief to them, and they will happily go on their way, whereas I will be left feeling annoyed with myself because I have failed.

However, all I have to do is continue to be relaxed and smiling, and they are prevented from resolving the cognitive dissonance. Then they will go on their way feeling uncomfortable with themselves, because they will be feeling bad about losing their control and being snappy with someone who was being pleasant with them.

The reason for being on the street is just to show that you are opposing the taking away of your freedoms. By showing yourself in this way, you are sending a powerful psychological message to everyone who sees you.

Although the encounter has left the person feeling uncomfortable, it has actually achieved something. The feeling of cognitive dissonance is the person's natural defence against lies and propaganda. The disease is in their brain in the form of the lies implanted by the propaganda, but their cognitive dissonance is fighting it. All the psychological messages that we send that increase their cognitive dissonance help them to fight the propaganda inside their minds. They will recover from the disease when they wake up to the reality of what is being done to them by all those institutions that they have been taught to trust.

So even when you are being rejected, you are doing a lot of good - don't let the refusals get you down!

Nuclear weapons nothing but propaganda

'He who controls the past controls the future'

by NIALL McCRAE

WE'VE all seen the images of Hiroshima, flattened in August 1945. Look closer, though, and several buildings remain standing.

The railway station, hospital and nineteen of the city's twenty bridges are intact. The damage to outer areas stops where the flames stopped. There is no crater - the bomb supposedly being detonated a thousand feet above - but no bald spot of vapourisation either.

In fact, the scene is remarkably similar to Tokyo, where 100,000 people were killed by firebombing on March 9 1945, more than in Hiroshima and Nagasaki combined. Almost entirely built of wood, Japanese homes and shops were rapidly destroyed by incendiary attack. But the Tokyo carnage lacks the historical significance of the 'nuked' cities.

Fear of Armageddon has resurfaced in the NATO proxy war against Russia. But is the risk real? Anders Björkman argues that nuclear weapons do not exist, but are used to keep people in awe, maintain balance of power, and feed the military-industrial complex our taxes.

Following the discovery of nuclear physics, an atom bomb was first suggested in 1913 by science fiction writer H G Wells. In 1938, the Germans performed nuclear fission, but Adolf Hitler did not pursue a weapon, perhaps dissuaded on the impracticality by physicist Werner Heisenberg.

In June 1942, U.S. President, F D Roosevelt, asked War Secretary, Henry Lewis Stimson, to build an atomic bomb within three years. Stimson appointed scientist Arthur Holly Compton, whose metallurgical laboratory was incorporated into the Manhattan Project, while Robert Oppenheimer was given responsibility for bomb design. Björkman's grandfather was a friend of Niels Bohr, who the Americans brought to Los Alamos for his expertise.

In May 1945, Compton told

Hiroshima Dome 1945

Stimson that a bomb would take years to complete, if at all. Harry Truman, who had succeeded Roosevelt in April, decided to bluff. From July 17 to August 2, Truman, Josef Stalin and Winston Churchill met at Potsdam on the spoils of war. Privy to the secret weapon, Churchill was informed of a successful test in the New Mexico desert, but he lost the general election during the conference, and was replaced by Clement Attlee. Stalin and Truman held lengthy meetings in private. The Soviet leader won exceptionally good terms at Potsdam, Björkman implying a deal on the nuclear hoax.

After the war, Japan was under the supreme command of General MacArthur. A priority was to establish the atom bombing as uncontested fact, using bogus eyewitnesses. Japanese officers who might speak out were executed as war criminals. For years, deaths from regular causes were attributed to radiation (where have we seen something similar recently?)

The story is perpetuated by annual memorials and museums at Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The USSR produced its first atom bomb in 1949. But highly publicised tests, Björkman believes, were faked. Huge supplies of dynamite were offloaded for a U.S. nuclear test in the Pacific, officially for comparative purposes. The distinctive mushroom cloud does not need nuclear force; an explosion in Beirut in 2020

(probably of ammonium nitrate) produced such a visual effect. Recordings of a tremendous flash are dubious. At Hiroshima, citizens who dived into the river to escape from flames did not see this phenomenon. So what really happened in 1945?

The answer is naphthene and palmitate, often shortened to 'napalm'. Soon after the USA entered the Second World War, Harvard chemistry professor, Louis Fieser, produced a jelly-like incendiary substance that could be fired under pressure, sticking to everything. Most notoriously used in the Vietnam War, Fieser's product was widely used on Japanese cities. In 1945, having annihilated the enemy air force, the Americans could systematically carpet-bomb any urban area with impunity. Solitary Boeing B-29 bombers Enola Gay and Bock's Car may have dropped special cargo over Hiroshima and Nagasaki, but according to Björkman the damage was caused by the same bombs that had been used elsewhere. USAAF records show nearby targets on the preceding nights with apparently excessive numbers of B-29s - did they hit Hiroshima and Nagasaki instead?

Intrigued by Björkman's thesis, I consulted Professor Mike Rainsborough of the War Studies Department at King's College London. He perceives a 'far-fetched' series of assertions, Björkman claiming "a form of gnostic insight somehow denied to ordinary mortals." Nuclear powers may exaggerate on unproven intercontinental ballistic missiles, but a conspiracy of pretence is fanciful, Professor Rainsborough maintains.

Undeniably, though, governments exert control through fear. Nuclear weapons, like covid-19 and disastrous climate change, are believed on authority rather than evidence. Hiroshima and Nagasaki are crucial to the narrative, because as George Orwell wrote, 'he who controls the past controls the future'. Sabre-rattling over the conflict in Ukraine may be nothing but posturing by leaders whose nuclear button has no wires.

In Hiroshima, eight missionary priests inside a Jesuit church near Ground Zero survived. Throughout their long lives, they were tested 200 times and never showed any signs of radiation. In Nagasaki, known as the Rome of Japan for its large Catholic population, a Franciscan convent was untouched. The inhabitants attributed this to divine mercy. But it could simply have been the difference between wood and stone, and between fact and fiction.

● <https://heiwaco.com>

The faulty physics of a 'nuke'

The concept of a nuclear weapon is a chain reaction of atoms splitting at the speed of light, causing explosion, blinding light and radiation. However, according to Anders Björkman, fission requires highly controlled conditions.

A power station may have 80-100 tons of nuclear fuel in the form of nuclear metal oxide pellets. These are gradually converted to pure energy in steel pipes. However, fission only occurs with the 0.7% of uranium atoms with 235 protons and neutrons, not with the 99.3% with 238 protons and neutrons. The pellets release heat that is absorbed in water. If cooling fails, the pipes overheat, and fission stops, as happened at Fukushima power station after a tsunami in 2011.

Nuclear 'weapons' contain only about 60kg of solid uranium 235, purportedly ignited by the compression of two pieces of such metal to double density, with a neutron between. The problem, according to Björkman, is that the heat generated by initial fission would melt the encasement, and the neutrons would fly away. The slow process of fission works; but the fast process is fantasy.

A memo to tyranny

Truth will out while freedom always prevails

by DR FRANCIS CHRISTIAN, FRCSEd, FRCSC

AS a warning to those who believe that the human race is for sale and enslavement, remember that we who believe in freedom always win, and you always lose. Always.

Our victory may not be immediate, or even immediately obvious when it occurs - but it is always waiting in the wings, ready to move in and lay waste to the fragile fortresses of tyranny that you have built.

We who believe in peaceful civil disobedience must remind you of its power - its power to bring down empires; its power to harass, hound and hound evil; its power to embarrass and dethrone the tyrant; and its resilience over many centuries, ever since the Cross and the Resurrection proved, for all time, that evil has no future.

In my essay on freedom, I pointed out that freedom's productive coupling with truth makes it invincible. Tyranny may have its little day, but the long night of oblivion for totalitarianism that follows freedom's triumph must make the tyrant tremble. In addition, tyranny is inherently an insecure, unstable system built upon shifting sand - and frequently turns upon itself.

Even during the 70-odd years of communism's terrifying reign across nearly half of the world, for example, there was never any rest for the wicked - the communist empire was never at ease, and was constantly turning upon itself. The crowns and the uneasy heads of these tyrants were constantly being replaced by other heads and crowns through bloody revolts, rebellions, intrigues, purges and assassinations.

The inheritors of Bolshevism's bloody and cruel assassination of the Tsar and his young family, in the wake of the Russian revolution of 1917, were themselves soon hunted down by other pretenders to the crown. Leon Trotsky, one of communism's chief cheerleaders and one of its most fearsome tyrants, was tracked down and killed with a pickaxe (supposedly on the orders of Stalin). Numerous others in the communist hierarchy, who once thought their positions of privilege and power impregnable, were executed in the terrifying purges of the 1930s.

When communism collapsed in the 1990s, out of its ashes emerged truth and freedom intact, triumphant. Also intact and triumphant were the great works of Russian literature that the communists tried to, but could never fully, suppress.

If you and your woke bureaucratic army dare to elevate the Earth above those of us who live in it, dare to take our livelihoods away and impoverish us, we will make sure that the blowback you receive teaches you a lesson you will never forget

Even in the days before the internet, the Samizdat (Russian for self-published, underground press) would be working in dimly lit apartments with manual typewriters and carbon copies, and in the early hours of the morning, extracts from the Bible, the works of Mikhail Bulgakov, Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Boris Pasternak and other Russian masters, and current (real) news would be smuggled out and distributed in the streets of the great Russian cities - and later, throughout the Soviet Union.

In the connected world of today, no tyrant should think that the truth can be hidden for any length of time. Nor is it possible to snuff out today's Samizdat press. As the Twitter files have recently shown, there is really no place for the tyrant to hide. We will relentlessly pursue and expose you - peacefully, effectively, efficiently and ruthlessly.

And the full weight of the law will most certainly catch up with you - not in the near term perhaps, but sooner than you think.

You, who have sowed to the wind, will reap the whirlwind, as surely as day follows night.

We, who believe in the inherent value of individual human life, also care deeply about the environment, and condemn its mindless degradation, and mankind's insatiable desire to consume resources. But no pagan mother earth deceptive mantra that you proclaim, in your quest for permanent meteorological dictatorship, will be able to save you from the fierce and purifying fires of massive civil disobedience and revolt.

If you and your woke bureaucratic army dare to elevate the Earth above those of us who live in it, dare to take our livelihoods away and impoverish us, we will make sure that the blowback you receive teaches you a lesson you will never forget. Nevertheless, when our courts declare you guilty as hell, our mercy will 'season justice' - and your optional sentence will be to be left in the Arctic with nothing but a fleet of your favourite electric cars.

And what if you imprison, torture or even kill us? For every one of us you think in your delusional hubris that you imprison or kill, ten more will rise in our place. The further you and your henchmen entrench yourselves in dystopian tyranny, the more terrifying for you will be the consequences - the judgements of history, the restored justice system, the rebel armies, and the hereafter. Like Obi Wan Kenobi, we must warn you that 'if you strike us down, we shall become more powerful than you can imagine'.

Because of the Cross and the Resurrection and their eternal significance, we are indestructible - and we have access to unlimited resources. But when your finite resources of totalitarian tyranny are overthrown and fade into oblivion, you will be left naked, exposed, and cowering with guilt and with fear.

There is still time for you to turn your artificial lives around and embrace freedom with us - but not that much more time.

Alistair Williams - cancelled for bringing people together

by DARREN SMITH

What's your 'waking up' story?

I did a show about food in 2017. Eventually I found out that if you want to be healthy, you just eat real food. Anything that's alive, anything that grows, anything that's natural – animals, plants – if you eat anything like that, you eat healthy. And if you eat anything processed, that's bad. As clever as we think we are, you can't produce food that's healthier than what the natural world does.

And the comedy industry immediately tried to destroy me, saying 'this guy hates fat people' – I'm just telling people to eat celery and to be healthy, and it showed me two things: one, if you try to help and do good things, the world will attempt to destroy you; and two, despite all of our understanding and science, there seems to be an intelligent design that can't be surpassed.

For example, all medicines are from the Earth; every single pill is made from nature - we just take them and combine them, etc. All healing too – how do you fix a broken bone? You make a cast to hold the bone together and it basically knits itself! The human body is the most incredible self-healing organism, and we're not smarter than that.

Think about a seed: from that one tiny little seed, you could feed the whole world. How incredible is a seed: recurring food forever! How does evolution explain a seed? How does a seed evolve to reproduce endless food? What is the evolutionary benefit to an apple to reproduce more apples? So the thing that first showed me God was, ironically, an apple.

What happened to your career?

I had this bit about McDonalds they put on Comedy Central TV, and that got me an agent, but what they wanted to do was change my material for TV – to the opposite of what my show was about.

You might have noticed that

stand-up on TV isn't very good any more – 90% of the comedians at the recording were bombing – they were doing terrible, no one was laughing, the jokes weren't very good. But then, when I watched the show on TV, the audience is laughing all over the place – all fake, all canned. So I go on last and do my McDonalds bit, and the audience loved it, but you would never tell from the recording. They knew that I wasn't going to be easily controlled at this point, so they'd decided that I wasn't going to make it. They even put another comedian's name on my viral clip!

The way the world and media work, if you don't say what they want you to say, you're just not going to be famous. There's no way to be against the establishment and be on TV, because they own the television. So those people you see on TV: 'hey they're on the side of the truth' – are they really? Some people are allowed on, but if the truth is told, it will be because it suits them to be told.

Where were all these great observational comedians when we were being coerced and forced to take an experimental injection? Did they not see what was going on there? You didn't think there was anything funny or disgraceful to make jokes about there? The mask mandate wasn't crazy to you? If you're not calling them out on this, then you're deliberately sitting on your hands.

Why do comedians choose to toe the line, and why didn't you?

If it's not true, people won't laugh. When you tell a good joke, it's 'ah! that's so true' – but they never saw it before. The idea of being a comedian is telling people the truth that was right next to them, but they didn't see it before, until you brought it up to them and mentioned it, and they laugh. I just wanted to be the best comedian in the world, and in order to do that, you have to find the truth, and you need to tell it – that's what being a comedian is about.

I found the truth, and I wanted to tell people the truth, and then I was destroyed for it, and at that point God revealed Himself to me. I just wanted to do the right thing, and I prayed and said: 'if you're real and I'm doing the right thing, then why am I so alone?'

Now I've got a wife, family, people all around me, and God really delivered. I lost my fake career, fake circles, and now He's given me back things that are real. So instead of being out there trying to be famous, all about myself, I'm out there trying to tell people about Jesus, which is much more rewarding and noble.

I don't care about my career – my life is incredibly difficult now, to make enough money to keep going. I used to do all the big comedy clubs. My most popular joke - the Brexit Burger King joke – the second it landed, they all stopped booking me. That joke set the clubs on fire - it should have made my career, but it did the opposite!

If you think about that joke, it's not even one side or the other. Everyone's being conned; your vote doesn't really count; the whole thing's a lie. If you wanted to remain, you found it funny, because it's like 'hey, they're getting screwed'; and if you wanted to leave, you found it funny, because it was like, 'hey, we're getting screwed'.

No one was offended, but I was still cancelled. You can't find anyone that was offended online or in the clubs. I was cancelled for doing my job well – making people laugh and bringing them all together – that's what I'm supposed to do!

Even if I was still a comedian on the big stages and TV now, I'd be using my skills to tell people about Jesus. How many famous comedians do that? I've proved that I have a skillset to make people listen, and people want to share, and it makes people laugh. So I'm the last person they're going to let tell people about Jesus – because people might actually listen!

When you're doing comedy, you are able to change someone's mind. Because laughing is involuntary - if something's funny, you just laugh, and if you're laughing you think 'wait a minute, I must agree with what he's saying on some level!' It's a very good medium for planting seeds and bringing people together, which is why it's so policed, and been so ruined by the establishment.

What should we do?

I'm not attempting to, and nor can I, defeat the evil powers of the world. What I would encourage people to do is live for your family. The first institution that God created is the family. So if you want to do the right thing, look after your family, be good to one another, be kind. Have people look at what you're doing and say 'things are going in the right direction since they started following Jesus'.

The Bible says to remain as salt – unchangeable, uncorruptible, no matter how bad the world's morality gets. We are here as a reminder and as a preservative – showing each other, so the light is never extinguished, and people will always be able to see it. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Put your trust in God, and He will take care of you.

Use non-compliance to fight unethical demands

by RICHARD HOUSE, C.PSYCHOL

Principled defiance against the surveillance state

THE notion of compliance went viral a couple of years ago, with Hi-Rez and Jimmy Levy's memorable line, 'we will not comply', in their hauntingly beautiful song, Welcome to the Revolution.

I first coined the term principled non-compliance (or PNC) in a meeting in March 2007, while looking into the British state's expressed intention to regulate the psychological therapies.

My colleagues and I won that argument then, with a famous victory in the High Court against the Health Professions Council - and to this day, Britain's psychological therapies, happily, remain non state-regulated.

PNC is a considered response to the ethically dissonant position into which people are increasingly being placed by escalating incursions of government and elite institutions into realms of human life not previously subject to the regulatory gaze of this control-obsessed surveillance state.

PNC sits comfortably alongside conscientious objection, with its long and distinguished cultural history, as the last refuge left available to those individuals upon whom demands are being made by state edicts with which they fundamentally disagree, from an informed and rationally argued ethical standpoint.

PNC is also relevant to Britain's burgeoning home education movement, as a rallying point for those families who fundamentally object to the government's intention to regulate home-educating families far more stringently.

The great psychoanalyst and paediatrician Donald Winnicott (1896–1971) was the great theorist of compliance, and the damage it can do to the development of what he termed 'the authentic self'.

Winnicott wrote: 'The mother who is not good enough... substitutes her own gesture for that of the child, which is to be given sense by the compliance of the infant.... this compliance is the earliest stage of the false self, and belongs to the mother's inability to sense her infant's needs.'

He continues: 'through this False Self, the infant builds up a false set of relationships, and even attains a show of being real, so that the child may grow up to be just like... whoever dominates the scene... so The False Self hides the True Self by its compliance with environmental demands.'

A key consequence of forced compliance, then, is the development of an inauthentic false self; and Winnicott also shows how the true/false self system is intimately

'We will not comply'
Welcome to the Revolution

related to creativity, with, according to Winnicott, creativity being one of the very first casualties of the compliant 'false-self configuration'.

There is also a highly prescient literature on conscientious objection and public disobedience as cultural phenomena, that is of direct relevance to PNC. On the American website, Draft Resistance News, for example, we read that: 'the government started draft registration in 1980 to "test the water" and see whether young people would cooperate. Well over a million of us didn't; we resisted. Since 1980, many times more of us have refused to register than during the entire Vietnam War. Unless the vast majority of us cooperate with the Selective Service System, the draft won't work.'

In other words, if enough people refuse to comply with forced state edicts, they just won't be sustainable.

There is a long and proud history of people making grave, ethical, principled decisions that are carefully thought through, and that challenge the overweening power and authority assumed unto itself by the state, where diktats fundamentally contradict the ethically-informed position of individual citizens – and when, at worst, those citizens sincerely believe that their compliance with the state's demands will perpetrate harm on others.

PNC, as a modern cultural phenomenon, is symptomatic of, and a telling commentary upon, recent highly pernicious developments in the balance between overweening state power and the autonomy of sovereign individuals.

The growing movement towards principled non-compliance, both in the field of the psychological therapies and now more widely in modern counterculture, should very much be seen in this light.

An equitable remedy for justice

The law at its root seeks to remedy conflict

by LANCE PEATLING

THROUGH the exercise of our one inalienable right - to do whatever we wish, save that which causes another harm - it is self-evident that we will intrude upon one another from time to time.

But any interference stopping us from going about our business unmolested is a breach of the peace, for the peace exists on either side of the boundary where my right ends and another's begins.

Fortunately, for the most part, these breaches are resolved privately.

Where we are unable to reach private agreement, our dispute can and indeed should be moved into the public realm, and it is the function of the courts to restore the peace.

This process was very much in evidence when Miller and Cherry disputed Boris Johnson's claimed authority to prorogue parliament.

The courts are based on common law to an extent.

Common law is simply the application of precedence. In brief, lower courts are bound to follow the ruling of a higher court; so on this basis, that which is established by the highest court (in the case of the UK, the Supreme Court) applies to all other courts.

The lower courts cannot deviate, as to do so would be to take the law into their own hands, which is an abandonment of office under their duties, rights and obligations to the law under their respective oath, affirmation or attestation:

"I will do right to all manner of people after the laws and usages of this realm, without fear or favour, affection or ill will."

It is of no surprise that the original oath of office of the Lord Chancellor, whom the monarch deputises to maintain the court system, is also the opening quote in the introduction to the Equal Treatment Bench Book.

And neither should it be of any surprise that the opening chapter of that guidebook is directed squarely at Litigants in Person and Lay Representatives, i.e., you and me.

After all, this is our law and these are our courts, and so it is only right and proper that the judiciary themselves establish, for all to see, the rules of the game. With the Bench Book in hand, it is perfectly permissible for us to understand how the court is required to conduct itself, and indeed compel it to do so, while seeking to determine the evidential truth.

The benefit, then, of a common law approach is that we need only understand the highest court of the land, as it governs all lower courts. This is not to say that there are not inconsistencies - there are many, but such inconsistencies can and must be disputed, so that lower courts are forced to function lawfully.

How are we to go about understanding how the high courts (Appeals and Supreme) operate? Again, the solution is simple: look to their judgements, as they are all available online with their reasoning published, setting the precedent for the transparency that you can also demand of lower courts.

It is a settled matter that for over 400 years, and continuing to this day, that the law of the land is ultimately based on equity, not common law, and thus all courts are perforce courts of equity

In seeking to understand how the highest (and thus all) courts operate, it is only necessary to quote their own words, and again turning to the Bench Book's opening page, we find all that we need to know:

"A judgement which results from an unfair trial is written in water" - Lord Reed Serafin v Malkiewicz and others [2020] UKSC 23.

This 2020 statement by the Supreme Court is simply stating that which King James I determined in 1615, in settling the dispute between Oxford v Magdalen, and which is reaffirmed in the 1981 Senior Courts Act, that:

'wherever there is any conflict or variance between the rules of equity and the rules of the common law with reference to the same matter, the rules of equity shall prevail'.

It is a settled matter that for over 400 years, and continuing to this day, that the law of the land is ultimately based on equity, not common law, and thus all courts are necessarily courts of equity.

So, what is equity?

At its simplest, it is that which is just and right, and it is invoked wherever there is an injustice, as equity will not suffer a wrong without a remedy.

Here again, our forebears gave us an elegant system of law. In going about our lives, we will inevitably have disputes, and where we are unable to settle matters privately, we take our argument to the court, whose sole purpose is to apply their mind impartially to the matter in hand, consider only the evidence presented, and establish the truth based upon their conscience (that which is right and just) where the existing common law precedence fails in remedy, thereby creating a new and binding precedent.

Thus, the law, defined as our birthright in the 1700 Act of Settlement, simply means remedy; no more, no less. Whenever some body (be that an individual or group of individuals - parliament for instance) calls into question your right to go about doing what you wish - save that which causes another harm - then that breach of your peace, that harm, where not resolved privately, must be remedied publicly in the court.

That our custom of late has been to not seek remedy to the many unlawful interferences in our lives, does not mean that the means of doing so are not available to us.

It is our obligation to use that means, as we are all, in our own right, peacekeepers, and have a duty to seek remedy in the court.

Piers Corbyn - physicist and resister

by SHANE FUDGE

Perhaps you could tell us a bit about your background, and how you got started in the movement?

I have a scientific background but, to a greater or lesser degree, I have always been a political activist. I went to Imperial College London in 1965, and got a first-class degree in physics in 1968. I continued to do research there, got elected president of the student union and, against all odds, won student representation and the diversification of courses. This pushed Imperial to branch out into various areas of medicine and business.

I returned to research part-time at Queen Mary College/Imperial in 1980-82, and gained an MSc in astrophysics from QMC. My scientific background enabled me to challenge the growing political consensus around climate change.

What I learned from my own studies was that their central theory of changed energy flow is nonsense. Solar activity is the cause of changes in climate, not CO<sub>2</sub>. Ice-core data demonstrate delays between CO<sub>2</sub> rise and temperature rise and that, from one age to another, the CO<sub>2</sub> rise follows the temperature rise. As with covid, climate change is central to Agenda 21/Agenda 30, which is being run through the United Nations, the WEF and the central banking system, for total control of the world.

Has the movement been effective?

I left London as soon as the lockdown was announced, to avoid being trapped there, and went to Glastonbury, where I organised two demonstrations. The first one comprised six of us at Glastonbury Cross Square in late April, and the second on May Day, 2020.

After returning to London, I hooked up with people who had started protesting around the London Eye. I spoke in Hyde Park, at Speaker's Corner, on May 16, and got my first arrest for the movement. We then had several rallies in May, June and July 2020, culminating in the legendary 40,000 gathered in Trafalgar Square on August 29, 2020.

It was at this event we realised some of the difficulties of getting people together i.e. egos and people who want to take control. Some of the doctors tried to stop me speaking (even though I had principally organised the event!), suggesting that people like myself and David Icke were conspiracy theorists. I had to stand my ground and tell them that I was speaking.

Piers Corbyn

The challenging things about the movement?

Well, there have clearly been plants, although it is not often obvious who they are. But despite challenges, a year later we had over a million people on the streets. In any case, the important thing was that we stood up early on and people followed us. If we hadn't done this straight away, more and more restrictions would have been imposed, and we could easily have been much further into tyranny now. If we can keep the broader vision of an overall federation working towards the same goals of beating the new world tyranny, I think we can win.

Are there any crossovers with (brother) Jeremy's stance?

I was supporting everything he did up until about two years ago. He might not agree with this, but I know that he knows that man-made climate change is bullshit. Unfortunately, like most politicians, he goes along with the prevailing winds. With covid, he actually does believe that there was a dangerous virus. He is certainly promoting the jab programme, although I don't know whether he has been jabbed; he won't say.

My brother and I were both on the bill to speak at a recent Word newspaper event in Manchester, where he declined a debate. I think this is wrong. We need a political discussion but, unfortunately, Jeremy – and the Labour Left itself – are against this. If the political left is against a debate, then we know the way that things are likely to go. Compromising with tyranny doesn't work, and the Labour left are now in cahoots with the New World Order. If my brother believes in the jab we should debate it. But none of his Truth & Justice group or JustStopOil/Extinction Rebellion will debate the jab or climate change.

In an age of misinformation, disinformation and outright lies, how do you stay reliably informed?

Well, if it is things that I know about, like the physics of meteorology and solar activity, then I know what the proven science is, and the difference in whether it has been observed and tested rather than modelled. On the medical stuff, I am not such an expert, but I listen to the various medical alliances and individual doctors who have been speaking out. I am always informed.

So, for instance, the meeting of Chris Whitty and Neil Ferguson that we broke up - we had done our research rigorously, and they fell apart when we challenged them. The very fact that they are fiddling the data shows that there is something wrong and they are trying to hide it. We do have actual data that can be obtained at present by anybody, they just don't put it on the BBC evening news in a transparent format and explain it properly.

How do you see the role of your party Let the UK Live, both now and in relation to what lies ahead?

I would say that political organisation is critical to success for the Truth/Freedom/Rights' movement. We will not beat this highly-organised tyranny by being disorganised. We must have very strong political organisation, which is why Let the UK Live is a serious political party.

Mainstream politics doesn't support any of the things that we stand for. I think that, potentially, this means that our message - if we can get it out there - has got a bigger purchase, and particularly when people see the politicians in power – the idiots, the corruption and the incompetency. But we do have to actually do it. Anyone can join Let the UK Live, as long as they agree with the basic principles. I would like everyone to join, of course, but the main thing is that we work together with all the groups - a federal sort of conception of the movement.

The main objective, whatever the format, is to get operating activities up and running in every area, and to build effective action in every town, village, city and county. Of course, you don't need to affiliate to anything to go on a march or outreach event. To people who are active, I just want to say: Keep it up, and every day, you've got to think of:

- 1) Preparing. What are you going to do if a new lockdown or tyranny attack comes? and:
- 2) What are you going to do today to let people know what is happening and to get them on our side?

The games that adults play

by RICHARD HOUSE

WAY back in the early 1980s, I did a series of introductory weekend workshops on Transactional Analysis (TA).

TA is an approach to psychotherapy and personal development created in the 1960s by Canadian psychiatrist and trained psychoanalyst, Eric Berne (1910-70). He found the interminable nature of psychoanalysis unacceptable, and was determined to devise an alternative that was faithful to some of the core theoretical commitments of psychoanalysis, yet which foregrounded the transactional aspects of social relationships. TA therefore made therapy far more accessible, understandable - and above all, quicker!

Such was the success of Berne's approach that many of the key terms of TA entered into popular culture - like 'I'm OK, You're OK', 'Parent, Adult and Child ego-states', 'strokes', 'scripts' - and the key focus of this article, 'games'. In his famous book, Games People Play, Berne shows how human beings typically play psychological games all the time, deploying secret or unconscious tactics and manoeuvres that can rule our lives, and which certainly contaminate and interfere with clear and direct transactions.

The term 'game' in TA refers to certain patterns of relational transactions that pop up repeatedly in everyday life, and which are an unconscious re-playing of strategies learned and chosen in childhood, but which now taint and subvert our mature adult transactions.

So game-playing in adulthood is essentially an attempt (an understandable, but ultimately an unhelpful and unsuccessful one) to meet a genuine child need. Berne outlined a long list of such 'games' in his classic book, but the one that I think truth and freedom campaigners need to be most aware of is the game 'Ain't It Awful!'.

In the 'Ain't It Awful!' game, those playing it seem to be positively revelling in the doom-laden narrative they're purveying, to the extent that they seem to be 'getting off' on it. To give just one possible origin of the game: a child that is given little if any positivity or hope by their parents in times of great adversity, needs to find a way to make wallowing in negativity okay, and even finds a way to morph their suffering into a perverse kind of pleasure. There are doubtless other possible origins of the game which I don't have the space to go into here.

Those purveying a doom-laden 'Ain't It Awful!' narrative need to start reflecting on the toxic game they might be caught up in, and whether the unremitting negativity that they commonly purvey is really helpful to our cause

The 'Ain't It Awful!' game also seems to be related to ranting, whingeing and victimhood, with those immersed in the game commonly wallowing in suffering to such an extent that it literally silences anything good or positive. And such immersion has all the hallmarks of addiction - such that the protagonist somehow gains a pay-off from playing the game that keeps them stuck in it, and unable to choose to relinquish it - until, that is, they gain the necessary adult insight needed to understand why they play it and, thus, transcend it (which is where effective therapy comes in, of course).

I think some of the alternative media platforms are often stuck in the 'Ain't It Awful!' game - InfoWars and Mike Adams' Natural News platform immediately come to mind. Recently, a caller on the Alex Jones Show suggested that the news presented on InfoWars is almost unrelentingly bad and depressing (i.e. of the 'Ain't It Awful!' variety), and that perhaps they could try to balance out the bad news with coverage that acknowledges and celebrates our successes against the rulers and their puppets. Encouragingly, Jones did acknowledge this, and that perhaps InfoWars should start foregrounding our successes more prominently.

Let's clarify what I'm not saying here: I don't dispute that there are some pretty awful things happening in the world. And I'm certainly not suggesting that these should be airbrushed out, and replaced by a sanitised kind of 'Positive News' for truthers. But I am saying that those purveying a doom-laden 'Ain't It Awful!' narrative need to start reflecting on the toxic game they might be caught up in, and whether the unremitting negativity that they commonly purvey is really helpful to our cause.

Of course the 'Ain't It Awful' narrative will undoubtedly appeal to, and hook in, those who are themselves psychologically addicted to the negativity game; but for those who aren't, the coverage of these independent media platforms will positively alienate possible converts to our cause for truth and freedom, and can easily lead to a kind of hopelessness and helplessness that, at worst, will lead to inaction and paralysis. On this view, the 'Ain't It Awful!' game has the effect of encouraging passivity and inaction, and addiction to a viciously cyclical doom-loop. For example, priming people to be ready for 'the big one' but leaving them stuck in paralysed inaction until it happens, which of course it doesn't ('trust the plan').

So, as truth and freedom campaigners, let's follow the lead of this newspaper and try to embrace a balanced view of the state of the world, being open realistically, as adults, to both the bad and the good news. As Bacon so rightly said (through Hamlet), 'There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.' And when our thinking leaves us wallowing psychopathologically in negativity, whingeing and victimhood, it's a pretty clear sign that we're stuck in the 'Ain't It Awful!' game; and to stay stuck in that place isn't going to help anyone - least of all to the cause to which truthers and freedom activists are so passionately committed.

Legal aid appeal to fight forced injection

by SUE CHATTON

TOM has just turned 23 years old. He was born with a congenital heart condition and cleft palette. He is also severely autistic, has no speech and has the mental age of around 18 months. Despite these difficulties, he is a happy, healthy young man.

His mother is his sole carer, and up until three years ago, with support from doctors and social workers, who in her words had become 'friends of the family', Tom and his mum lived a care-free life.

Then along came covid. During the initial lockdown, Tom and his mum saw all support stop, somehow they were not even considered to be on the vulnerable list.

At first Tom's mum was totally filled with fear, thinking that the virus would take her son, so she did everything she could to protect him. After doing her own research, she realised Tom was not at risk. They both also had previously been ill and had fully recovered.

Early in 2021, things changed again. The doctors were now sending Tom for various check-ups and appointments, and every time, the question of Tom's not having had the covid injection was raised. Due to Tom's previous heart surgery at the age of one, his mum was fearful that the injection would have an adverse effect on him, especially as there had been, and still continue to be, so many cases of myocarditis and pericarditis in young males, as a result of having been injected with an mRNA shot. After months of harassing telephone calls, emails and letters, a package arrived in the post summoning Tom's mum to court.

The initial court case was in September 2022, when the judge ruled that Tom had to be injected, despite the overwhelming evidence that was put forward by the defence. It was deemed that if Tom was capable of making his own decisions, he would be an upstanding citizen and take the injection for the good of others.

Tom's case has now gone to appeal, but as you can probably imagine, costs are significant and being a single parent and Tom's sole carer, Tom's mum cannot afford all the legal fees.

Many other families are being hauled through the courts in order to forcibly inject their loved ones against their will, and we desperately need to raise as much money as possible to help set a precedent for them. A crowdfunder has been set up for those who can give a little something to help this case. If you are unable to help financially, please share Tom's story wherever possible - you never know who is reading.

Spreading the truth and seeing the light

by DARTFORD AND BEXLEY REBELS

IT'S a huge task these days to get the truth out there, as we all know. Despite being a small group from North Kent, we formulated and implemented many strategies in an attempt to reach folk on the ground with our dedicated and determined team of activists.

Using our many varied skill sets, along with plenty of time and effort, our group set off to awaken the world to what is going on, seemingly right under their noses.

We bulk buy The Light paper every month, and every Tuesday we hand papers out to passers-by and put them in shops in various areas like Bexleyheath, Dartford, Crayford, Sidcup, Abbey Wood, Eltham and Welling.

At first, many people refused to take a copy, or were simply abusive and we would find them in the bin or thrown onto the street. Now the tide is turning, and we find people asking for them, with abandoned ones few and far between. It has been both encouraging and rewarding, as more and more people are thanking us for what we are doing and are now engaging us in meaningful conversations.

We also hold a yellow board and banner display over the M25 every Friday afternoon, near to the Dartford crossing, with truth bombs for the public to read. We have been doing this for 18 months, and the mood of the people has changed from abuse to clapping, blowing kisses and overall, brilliant general support (and no, we don't glue ourselves to the road or railings). We even get support from the local police on occasions.

We have also targeted local areas with leafleting, outreach tables, memorial displays for the deceased or injured, and will now include '15 Minute Smart Cities' and 'Cash is Freedom' information.

We wanted to reach more people and decided we would try a dedicated website, to encourage folk to research for themselves. We all put forward articles, videos etc., and one of our very talented group members has developed a brilliant website that moves with the narrative. It is absolutely amazing and she has devoted so much time and effort with the creation that now, we would love to reach out to more people to share, and encourage other groups to do the same.

Programmable

What is a CBDC?

Central bank digital currency is programmable digital money, which will be fully monitored, and can be controlled and restricted in any number of ways.

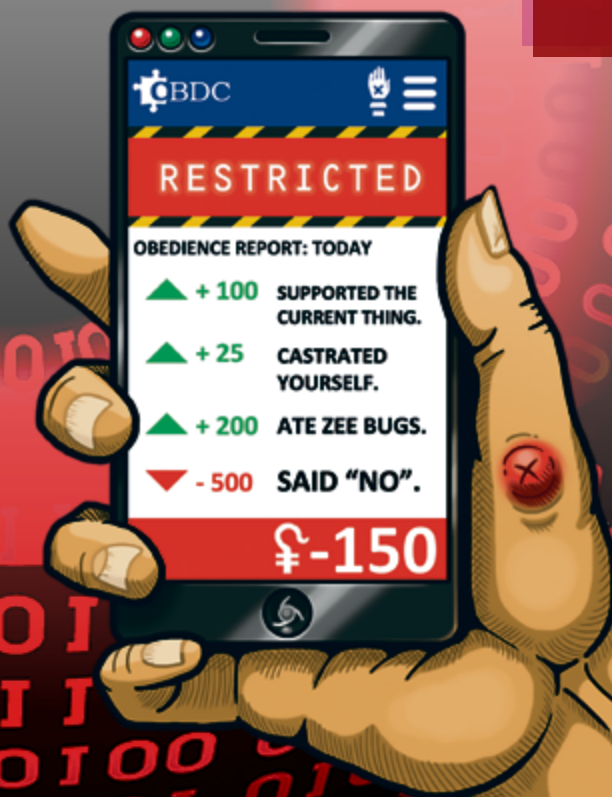

CBDC will mean the end of privacy, freedom and autonomy for everyone, and total compliance with the whims of the political wind of the day.

Banks have been nudging us into a cashless society for decades - first introducing credit cards in the 1970s, then debit cards, chip and pin, contactless and pay apps.

There is no valid reason to bring CBDC in, other than to gain total control over everyone's finances, and it should be resisted by everyone who values freedom.

Now we are finally at the precipice of an all-digital PROGRAMMABLE currency, and once cash is gone it won't be coming back.

Why is CBDC different from what we already have?

Although you might think you have full control over your money and how you spend it, you also have the option of using a card or ATM and withdrawing cash, which is always fully private.

PRIVACY:

CBDCs are blockchain technology - a digital ledger of every single transaction, recorded permanently. Anyone with access, at any time in the future, will be able to look at everything you have bought and sold, every bill and tax you've paid or not, and use anything they find against you.

SAVINGS:

Money with an expiry date means you will never be able to save and create financial stability for yourself or your family. Everyone will be living hand-to-mouth and unable to plan financially.

Western Australia's dormant police state

Legislation passed that allows for closure of businesses and forced vaccinations

by REBEKAH BARNETT

AFTER 963 days in a State of Emergency (SoE), Western Australia finally returned to some semblance of normalcy last November with the SoE finally expiring.

However, this does not mean that it's over for good. Premier Mark McGowan and his Labor government used their majority in the Upper and Lower Houses to force replacement legislation through parliament in October. This was in spite of vehement pushback from the opposition, the crossbench, and the public.

In what is essentially a rebranding of the Public Health Act 2016 SoE powers, the new Emergency Management Amendment (Temporary covid-19 Provisions) Bill 2022 allows the government to renew its emergency powers on a thrice-monthly basis over the next two years.

McGowan has already foreshadowed its use, stating just days before the SoE expired: "If we have a spike, a new variant comes along, something occurs that we haven't foreseen, it's there as a back-up measure should it be required."

And sure enough, a new wave of 'grandchildren of Omicron' variants arrived right on time for Christmas.

The key difference between the new legislation and the former is that the covid pandemic response has been removed from the scope of qualified medical and health professionals and put into the hands of the Police Commissioner.

This is problematic on two counts. First, the legislation requires that the Police Commissioner consult with the Chief Health Officer; however, there is no requirement that the Commissioner acts according to the advice given. Second, the Police Commissioner is not an elected representative and is not answerable to the public or parliament.

Senator Dr Brian Walker, a medical doctor and strong opponent of the Bill, said at a protest outside Parliament House: "This Bill stinks... taking [the pandemic] out of the hands of medical practitioners... putting it into the hands of a policeman. And I don't know about you, but I do not want to live in a police state."

Police state is an apt description, as the powers afforded to the Police Commissioner under this legislation are extreme and threatening.

Section 77 has received the most attention for the astonishing breadth of powers afforded to the Police Commissioner and his designated 'authorised covid-19 officers' who, under this legislation, can: take control of private property, including vehicles or 'things'; break and enter your home, vehicle or business, without a warrant and without your consent; forcibly detain people in isolation; compel you to provide your personal information; compel the closure of roads, businesses, places of worship and other routes or places of gathering; and, most shockingly, force anyone deemed to have been exposed to SARS CoV-2 to submit to 'infection prevention and control procedures' which includes forced vaccination (Section 77N).

The prospect of forced vaccination sparked howls of terror and outrage in the public, but in fact the legal allowance for forced vaccination was already passed in the Public Health Act 2016 under Section 158.

Just about the only thing that the Police Commissioner cannot do under the new provisions is to close the state border. The contents of the Bill are only half the problem, however. The way in which the legislation was steamrolled through parliament is also cause for concern.

STATES OF EMERGENCY
KEEPING THE GLOBAL POPULATION IN CHECK
KEES VAN DER PIJL

McGowan's government withheld the details until 6pm the night before it was to be debated in the Lower House, denying the opposition and crossbench any reasonable amount of time to review the Bill, seek advice, formulate questions and arrive at a considered position.

Every member of the opposition and crossbench opposed the bill. Thousands of people turned up to protests held outside Parliament House. MPs and Senators were inundated with correspondence from the public expressing concern and dismay. Any debate that was had was arbitrary anyway. McGowan had already announced the new laws to the media, and the Labor majority fell in line. There was a widespread understanding that Labor MPs and Senators were not to cross the floor on this bill, lest there be consequences, and that this is indicative of the kind of leadership that they are under, though no one will say this on the record.

The nub of the issue with McGowan is that, though he operates within a democratic system, he behaves like a dictator. He is intolerant of people and viewpoints that he does not understand - 'othering' them with language and laws that serve to push these groups further to the margins of our society. His government and associated departments are famously cagey, and his segregation measures were some of the most extreme in the world.

With the introduction of this new legislation, McGowan is insisting that the public trust that future measures taken will be proportionate, reasonable, and fair.

Yet this is the same man who thought it appropriate to send police to a Perth cafe to arrest the unvaccinated owner, and forcibly pack her into a paddy wagon.

He oversaw police raids on multiple other small businesses including chiropractors and cafes, to ensure enforcement of vaccine mandates. He enforced travel vaccination mandates on children as young as 12 well into 2022, when it was known that the injections did not prevent transmission, and were of questionable necessity and safety to young people. And his quarantine rules were enforced under threat of prison, a threat that was carried out on multiple occasions.

This is not the track record of a proportionate, reasonable and fair government. This is an extremist, police-state style of governance, whereby the ruling class (with complicit media in its pocket) barely bothers to persuade, opting rather to rule by threat and punishment.

For the time being, the police state lies dormant. The SoE has expired, and we have returned to some kind of nanny-state normal.

However, the infrastructure is in place, and can be engaged at any time should the Premier and his Police Commissioner think it reasonable and necessary. Whatever that means.

Japanese team finds alarming abnormalities during autopsies

by PAUL BENNETT

JAPANESE doctors conducting autopsies have discovered disturbing results regarding the experimental covid jabs.

In a detailed report, Professor Masataka Nagao, a medical specialist in forensic medicine from the Hiroshima University School of Medicine, reported how the bodies of vaccinated individuals he autopsied were unusually warm, with body temperatures over 100 degrees Fahrenheit (about 40 Centigrade). He said: “We believe the vax is related to serious immune abnormalities. The first concern was that the body temperatures of the corpses were very high when the police performed the autopsy.”

Nagao’s research team also observed significant changes to the genetic make-up of vaccinated autopsied patients’ immune systems. The thorough investigation has led Nagao to conclude that the vaccine causes immune system abnormalities that prompt inflammation throughout the body, which is likely the cause of the high body temperatures at the time of autopsy.

In another disturbing report, dermatology expert, Professor Shigetoshi Sano, from the Kochi University School of Medicine, discovered spike proteins at the site of skin lesions and other skin problems in patients who were vaccinated.

Prof. Sano told reporters: “The spike protein derived from the vaccine was found in the skin. Spike proteins are locally suppressing the immune system. The process of the spike proteins degrading in the immune system prompts inflammation throughout the body that also leads to blood clots. The function of the spike proteins to produce adverse reactions is formation of blood clots. And even worse, spike proteins can also locally induce inflammation.”

Sano added, “I don’t know if I should say this, but it has been found that vaccinated people are more likely to get coronavirus than unvaccinated people. Sometimes, things that are not good are introduced into the human body. Vaccination may cause our overall immune system to fail to fight against such bad things.”

In other developments, University Prof. Emeritus, Dr. Masanori Fukushima, has slated Japan’s Ministry of Health for refusing to stop its covid jab programme, due to current data and research indicating severe adverse reactions and deaths related to the jab.

Fukushima told health ministers during a conference: “People are already doing research all over the world. Japan’s prestige is at stake. You have vaccinated so many people. And yet, only 10% of the members of the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare, who are leading members of the vaccine campaign have been vaccinated. Is this a joke?”

Worldwide, the wheels are slowly coming off the ludicrous and scandalous mantra of ‘safe and effective’ jabs. Investigations coming out of Japan are only the start of things to come.

Ecuadorian father changes gender for custody

by PAUL BENNETT

A FATHER from Ecuador has gone to great lengths to win custody of his two daughters by changing his gender to female.

Rene Salinas Ramos claimed it was because the Ecuadorian justice system favours mothers in custody battle cases.

Afte changing his gender to ‘Femenino’, Ramos passionately told local media outlet La Voz del Tomebamba in late December 2022: “Being a father in this country, Ecuador, is punished and I’m only seen as a provider. What I have been looking for is to give the love and protection that a mother can give her children. The law says that the one who has the right is the woman. As of this moment, I am female.

Now I’m also a mom, that’s how I consider myself. I am very sure of my sexuality. What I have sought is that I want to be a mother, so that I can also give the love and protection of a mother.”

Ramos’s decision to change his gender to get custody of his children has upset trans activists in the country. Diane Rodríguez, the director of the Ecuadorian Federation of LGBTI Organizations, told VICE News: “This man’s private matter, to obtain custody of his daughters, isn’t in the spirit of the law. We are afraid that in the Assembly things will go backwards, and they will start legislating against us.”

Rodríguez’s organisation also issued a statement, saying: “Although the optional gender change and sex change in the identity card of trans people is now a reality, it is important to indicate that the norm is not fully complied with.”

Ramos responded to criticism by saying that his drastic action “is not against a person, not to harm anyone, but rather to fight against this system that has stigmatised the fact of being born a man.”

The desperate measure by Ramos demonstrates the continued favouritism towards women in custody battles, and the inequalities and obstacles that still remain for many men across the world in trying to win custody of their children.

‘Do as we say, not as we do’ hypocrisy from those who say we must reduce energy and travel

by LEWIS BRACKPOOL

The political pundit revealed: “There’s lots of Ukraine and stuff. ‘Ukraine is New’, whatever that means. There’s lots of general globalism and globalisation everywhere. This idea that we would be better if we were one. I think a one nation-state altogether is what they’re looking at. It’s bizarre. There’s propaganda everywhere you look.”

Regardless of where people sit on the spectrum of conspiracy belief, the occurrence of Davos is alerting more and more people to the reality of high-level corruption.

“Most people are waking up to the idea that the biggest businesses and the most influential and powerful people in the world meeting together and collaborating behind our backs isn’t necessarily the best news for the common folk,” said Calvin.

“There’s been a lot of talk about the WEF over the last two or three years. As a result, I think they’re a bit scared because these are all, generally speaking, politicians of some sort or another, interested in protecting their image. So I think for the big dogs not to come here is a massive statement.

“We should be concerned about who is here though. Keir Starmer is here with Tony Blair. Could it be that they’re grooming the next Prime Minister of the United Kingdom?”

WE’RE not seeing too many familiar faces at the WEF summit this year.

Rishi Sunak from the UK, Emmanuel Macron from France, Joe Biden from the U.S. - Sky News even put out a headline which read: ‘Why an absence of A-listers at Davos is not just deep trouble for the World Economic Forum, but for globalisation too’.

Anglican Deacon and regular TV commentator, Calvin Robinson, spoke to Ickonic reporter Lewis Brackpool live from the summit. He began by revealing the less-than-environmentally-friendly elite arrival methods.

Calvin said: “I saw all these private jets flying in. Then I saw people grabbing their helicopters from the private jet to a helicopter pad which is closer to the conference. Then people get escorted in black SUVs from the helicopter pad to the conference. Bearing in mind, pretty much everything at this conference is about climate change. The whole agenda is the so-called climate crisis or climate emergency. One thing after another they’re telling us how to live our lives, you know - eat bugs, use less fuel, and then at the same time, this is how they’re travelling to do it. The hypocrisy is hilarious actually.”

Agenda-pushing narrative around European conflict is rife at the conference too.

Privatising nature - Wall Street's 'natural asset companies'

Bankers now engaged in the ultimate theft of the commons

by CLIVE MENZIES

THE commons are all those things that are free, but have value because we all make a contribution to that value through our needs of what they provide and our capacities to use them.

Examples are: land, water, air, forests and even landing slots at Heathrow airport. The value of those landing slots is co-created by all the private individuals, businesses, public bodies, etc. that use or provide services at Heathrow. That value is appropriated by a private company, Heathrow Airport Holdings, that is in turn owned by FGP Topco Limited. Circumstantial evidence and analysis from multiple perspectives suggest that ultimate beneficial ownership is vested in banking and royal families. We are denied access to the commons unless we pay a rising 'tribute' to the money power described in The Light 26, page 3.

Land was the first commons that was appropriated through hierarchy and money. Initially, in the UK, the Crown, aristocracy and the Church were the beneficiaries of the theft of the commons. Enclosures since the industrial revolution have decimated access to common land, and forced people into cities and towns to earn sufficient tribute to survive. The beneficiaries of the value of the land had to balance their greed with the need to maintain popularity, or at least compliance amongst those they exploited.

However, it was the evolution of banking, with the establishment of the Bank of England in 1694, that began the process of concentrating beneficial ownership through debt. Impecunious or extravagant aristocrats were willing borrowers and, over time, as more became unable to make repayments, their estates were either repossessed or shrunk through enforced sale. Henry VIII had already taken and distributed land to the aristocracy after the dissolution of monasteries.

In 1869, Henry George wrote Progress and Poverty after touring towns and cities across the United States. He was shocked by the abject poverty that resided alongside thriving businesses and visible affluence. He advocated Land Value Tax to redistribute the value of the commons that had been appropriated.

In the latter half of the 20th century, the Chicago Business School developed the idea of privatising public assets into public policy. Augusto Pinochet implemented the policy with a reign of terror that began in 1973; Naomi Klein called it 'the Shock Doctrine'. A decade later, the UK had its own privatisation agenda.

The World Bank and International Monetary Fund endorsed the policy by issuing debt across Latin America and beyond, against public assets, to levy rising tribute.

Evo Morales came to power in Bolivia on the back of a mass revolt against water privatisation that had started in 2000, but that was only a bump in the road as far as the agenda for privatising public assets is concerned. The Greek government, in 2015, capitulated to extortion by the 'troika' (European Commission, European Central Bank and the IMF), and privatised swathes of public assets in exchange for a bailout (the bucket is full of holes and an illusion that denies access to essential services to those most in need).

Attacks on nature, food and energy resulting from the mythical climate crisis are integral to the global shock doctrine, a.k.a. The Great Reset. Exponential debt is the driving force. The destination? The majority will have access to nothing... and won't be happy.

The fraudulent climate science that was already exposed through leaked data, emails and documents in 2009's 'climategate' is still the basis of carbon credits that began trading around the same time. Propagandists such as Al Gore were instrumental in the establishment of what Rothschild, Rockefeller and Maurice Strong described at the UNCED conference in 1992, the trading of carbon credits. Reuters declared at the beginning of last year: 'Global carbon markets value surged to record $851bn last year'. The launch of a Rothschild bank to handle these credits (debt) was announced at the same UNCED event.

No doubt these same elements are behind NACs (Natural Asset Companies). We know this because the development of NAC trading was led by the banking system, the Rockefeller Foundation and the New York Stock Exchange. They have teamed up with Intrinsic Exchange Group.

NACs begin with the identification of a natural asset, such as a forest or lake, which is then quantified using specific protocols. As for carbon credits, these protocols involve creative accounting and arbitrary assumptions to create the illusion of investable value. Options and other derivative securities are then created on the back of this illusion. The securities that precipitated the global financial crisis in 2008 were similarly fabricated. Fraudulent and low-quality mortgages were bundled together and dressed up, through collusion between investment banks and credit rating agencies, as high quality investment securities. When reality dawned, 'the shit hit the fan', and we've been paying the price ever since.

The extent of the NAC scam is breathtaking. The real world economy (trading of goods and services) is worth around $90 trillion. This real economy is eclipsed by the capital value of securities created mainly as debt and derivatives, currently $512 trillion, which is why financial markets decimate the real economy when they collapse.

IEG estimates nature's economy, i.e. the commons which belong to all, to be worth $125 trillion. Their projected asset values to be traded on the back of this activity amount to $4,000 trillion. This ponzi scheme makes the tulipmania of the 1600s and the South Sea Bubble collapse in the following century look relatively benign, because this market affects everyone.

We are all impoverished by financial collapse, not just the greedy and the gullible who are seduced by headlines such as 'NYSE to List New Natural Asset

Companies Asset Class, Targeting Massive Opportunity in Ecosystem Services' – Mark Segal, 17 September 2021

Mark is a proponent of ESG (Environmental, Social and Governance) and was previously head of equities at Delaney Capital Management in Toronto, Canada.

ESG is a fundamental component of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. 'Sustainability' is an inversion, because this agenda denies us the means to sustain ourselves without paying a rising tribute.

Real sustainability is achieved through open-source, self-organisation. The good news is that open-source research and analysis is already spreading awareness of the climate crisis myth and the plunder that accompanies it.

Many who have learned, often the hard way, about the covid scam are awakening to all the other lies they once believed. Collapse of financial markets, premised on these illusions, is inevitable. The question is when, and who will be holding the NAC bags when it happens?

Vaccine injuries emerging in Australia

by REBEKAH BARNETT

THE topic of covid vaccine injury catapulted into Australian mainstream media at the end of last year, with the bombshell revelation that Dr Kerryn Phelps, a former federal MP and president of the Australian Medical Association (AMA), had suffered a ‘devastating’ injury following her Pfizer vaccination. In a case of extraordinarily bad luck, her wife, Jackie Stricker-Phelps, also suffered a severe neurological reaction to her covid vaccination.

Dr Phelps claimed that: “Regulators of the medical profession have censored public discussion about adverse events following immunisation, with threats to doctors not to make any public statements about anything that ‘might undermine the government’s vaccine rollout’ or risk suspension or loss of their registration.”

Following Dr Phelps, doctors have stepped forward to speak out against medical censorship. Dr Chris Neil, cardiologist and President of the Australian Medical Professionals Society (AMPS), says that regulators have created a culture of fear and silence in the Australian medical profession, and is actively campaigning for reform with AMPS’s Stop Medical Censorship national tour.

THE New South Wales (NSW) health department will no longer publish the vaccination status of those hospitalised and deceased with covid.

NSW, the most populous state in Australia, is the only state to have published hospitalisations and deaths with covid by vaccination status throughout the pandemic, revealing that in many weeks, there were zero unvaccinated patients in hospital with covid. NSW announced its updated reporting protocol in December 2022, stating that: “With most of the population having received at least two doses of vaccine and there being differences in timings of booster dosing across different age groups, the trends between vaccines and outcomes cannot be interpreted using these data.”

As of January 2023, 95.9% of the population aged 16+, and 51.5% of the population aged 5-15, has received two or more doses. Approximately 1.2 million NSW residents remain unvaccinated. Multiple parties have put in Freedom of Information requests for age-stratified covid data by vaccination status, but NSW Health has yet to provide it.

IN news from other states, the Queensland (QLD) Police Force has finally revoked its requirement that employees over the age of 50 must have a second booster (i.e. fourth dose).

The Western Australian (WA) government has appointed three independent experts to conduct a review of the state’s covid pandemic management and response. Premier Mark McGowan maintains that WA’s pandemic response gave WA, “the best health and economic outcomes in the world.” Despite avoiding lockdowns for much of 2021, WA had a hard border for over 900 days, during which time families were separated and, in one infamous case, chronically depressed West Australian Robyn D’Argent committed suicide after being denied entry to her home state on several occasions. D’Argent’s parents hope to make a submission to the inquiry, but it is unclear at this stage if the public will be invited to participate.

A covid vaccine class action is due to commence in early 2023, representing hundreds of the vaccine injured. The class action is being organised by a not-for-profit group called No More Silence, which was founded by a doctor who has witnessed many vaccine injuries first-hand. The action will argue that the therapeutic regulatory body, the Therapeutic Goods Administration, are responsible for the compensation of injuries due to failures in regulating the covid vaccines.

On January 21, Bill Gates was seen not in Davos, but meeting with Australian Prime Minister Anthony Albanese. It is reported that they discussed public health, pandemic preparedness and climate change. Discussing malaria, Gates told Albanese that: “We want to do the same thing we’re doing with polio, which is eradicated regionally, and then eradicated all over the world.” It is unclear if Albanese is aware that numbers of vaccine-derived polio infection now outstrip wild polio infections.

How a Ukrainian MP tried to make her Marc

False claims about child war victim are exposed

AS 2022 was drawing to a close, Lesia Vasylenko, a Ukrainian MP, posted a tweet to her more than 350,000 followers on Twitter.

Her tweet had a short life though: she took it down some hours after posting. She had little choice. The problem centred on the image of a little boy, whom she called Marc.

It was an outright lie. The photo was at least a decade old

Lesia claimed he was a survivor of a recent attack by Russian artillery in her tweet:

“The saddest part: there are no children in #Ukraine anymore. Only little humans with very grown up eyes, old even. Somewhat tired of a life yet un-lived. Pictured: Marc, 8 yo, just survived a #russia artillery attack.”

It was an outright lie. The photo was at least a decade old and had been taken by D. Sharon Pruitt, an American photographer.

Another Twitter user drew the world’s attention to the deception. He posted an image of a book cover by the Irish

by DAVID M. KIELY

author, Christina McKenna, who has published several non-fiction books, including The Dark Sacrament: Exorcism in Modern Ireland. But her most popular book was her first novel, The Misremembered Man, published in 2008.

This bestseller tells the story of a lonely farmer whose early childhood was blighted in an orphanage, and who’s in search of a wife. A tragicomedy, it was translated into many languages, including Spanish in 2013, under the title of El hombre en el olvido.

We live in a time of misinformation spread by the establishment, and blatant fraud by corporations. The internet is policed by so-called fact checkers that give the lie to thousands of fake stories. Many bogus victims have emerged from the Russia-Ukraine conflict. The boy ‘Marc’ was just one of many.

The word soon went out. After the novel’s cover was posted as a rebuttal by legions of eagle-eyed Twitter users, the Ukrainian politician was forced to remove her tweet.

Christina McKenna was more than intrigued that a work by an Irish author could make its mark on a battlefield far, far away.

We can but hope that it deters the fraudsters.

A new year - but the same old news

by DAWN LESTER & DAVID PARKER

The public are being kept in a state of stress - but there is a way out of it

AT the beginning of each New Year, many people make 'New Year's Resolutions' - they set their intention to make changes to improve their lives for the better.

Sadly, although not surprisingly, the mainstream corporate media do not appear to have made any such resolutions to make changes for the better, as far as their health reporting is concerned. This can be demonstrated by the stories they have published at the beginning of 2023, which are all just more of the same kind of fear-mongering propaganda and lies that they reported throughout 2022 - and 2020 and 2021, of course.

According to a January 6 NHS England web page entitled Flu cases up almost half in a week as NHS answers near-record 111 calls: 'New figures for the week leading up to New Year's Day, showed there were 5,105 patients with flu in general and acute hospital beds, up from 3,479 the previous week.'

Part of the reason for this is to promulgate the notion that the NHS is 'in crisis', which is a separate issue and not the subject of this article.

According to the NHS web page entitled Flu: "Flu will often get better on its own..."

This raises the question: Why are people in hospital with 'the flu'?

The NHS claims that 'the flu' can make people seriously ill and advises: "Call 999 or go to A&E if you:

- get sudden chest pain
- have difficulty breathing
- start coughing up a lot of blood"

So the next questions that need to be asked are: why are more people experiencing serious symptoms that require hospitalisation? Can these symptoms really be the result of 'the flu'? Is it not more appropriate to say that they are really indicative of a much more serious health problem?

Interestingly, the situation in the U.S. is said to be somewhat different, as indicated by a January 6 CNN article entitled As flu tapers off, covid-19 again shows signs of a winter spike, which states that: 'First, the respiratory virus season brought us RSV to worry about, and then came influenza. Now, covid-19, which had taken a back seat to those viruses, is once again becoming a menace, and health officials are urging people to stay vigilant.'

Note the use of words like 'menace' that are obviously intended to create fear.

However, the difference between the situations in the U.S. and the UK is not explained; which is rather surprising considering that the Atlantic Ocean was not a barrier to the alleged spread of 'covid-19' that apparently affected people in both countries in the same way, and to the extent that 'the flu' miraculously disappeared in both countries during 2020 and 2021.

The point to emphasise is that these stories have nothing whatsoever to do with any so-called 'virus' and everything to do with the agenda of the 'would-be controllers'. A key goal of their 'health' agenda is to create and maintain a sufficiently high level of fear, so that people will comply with any and every measure recommended by the various health agencies, government health departments and the WHO. The same can be said for all of the goals of the agenda.

It is not our intention in this article to create fear, but to highlight the deliberate efforts by those who are orchestrating matters behind the scenes to keep people stressed and in a state of fear without good reason.

This can be demonstrated by such documents as the one prepared by the SAGE behavioural science sub-group, SPI-B, in March 2020 entitled Options for increasing adherence to social distancing measures. Under the heading 'Persuasion', the document states the following:

'The perceived level of personal threat needs to be increased among those who are complacent, using hard-hitting emotional messaging.'

It should be abundantly obvious that if the measures were based on 'science' - real science that is - there would be no need to use emotional messaging to persuade people to adhere to 'social distancing' and other measures.

The reason this is important to highlight is because when stressed, people cannot think as clearly as they would otherwise be able to think, which means they are less able to take the necessary and appropriate informed actions.

In our book, we show that short-term stress is a normal part of everyday life. It is only when stress becomes prolonged that it can and does become damaging to our health; Dr Hans Selye MD refers to this in his work as 'distress'.

In addition to the fact that people are being made to live in a state of 'distress' is the recognition by people like Dr Gabor Maté that many people also suffer from unresolved past traumas in their lives. In his book When The Body Says No, Dr Maté refers to the work of Dr Selye and states that: 'The stress response... can also be triggered by emotional trauma or just by the threat of such trauma, even if purely imaginary.' He also states that: 'The essence of threat is a destabilisation of the body's homeostasis.' In other words, threats, even if imaginary, can adversely affect a person's health. It is therefore extremely important for people to realise that there is no reason to fear any so-called 'virus'; these 'particles' cannot be transmitted between people and cannot make them ill. There is no scientific evidence to support this notion; people are clearly being made to fear something that is purely imaginary.

The nonsense of media reports can be further demonstrated by the renaming of the alleged Omicron 'variant' from XBB.1.5 to 'Kraken', the name of the sea monster from Scandinavian folklore. It is important to recognise that the Omicron variant called 'Kraken' is just as fictional as the sea monster it is named after.

As we have explained repeatedly since February 2020, there is no evidence - and never has been - for the existence of any so-called 'pathogenic virus', not just the one called 'SARS-CoV-2'; they are all imaginary. In addition, there can be no 'variant' of something that has never been proven to exist.

The imaginary nature of 'viruses' is succinctly explained by Dr Mark Bailey in his excellent September 2022 essay entitled, A Farewell to Virology:

'... 'viruses' such as SARS-CoV-2 are nothing more than phantom constructs, existing only in imaginations and computer simulations.'

The purpose of our articles, including this one, is to provide the information necessary for people to be able to make truly informed decisions.

When people are aware of the lies they are being told, they no longer need to remain in a state of fear; this leads to the reclamation of freedom, and much better health.

How to detox naturally

Easy methods to flush away those toxins

by LUCY DAVIES

DETOX has become such a buzzword - a bit of a meaningless cliché, especially in January. What does it really mean and do we really need to do it?

Some will always disagree, but in my view, given the toxic cocktail our world has become, and how disturbingly normalised and omnipresent it all is, it's an absolute no-brainer.

From water to food, to clothing, cleaning products, cosmetics, pharma drugs, emf radiation, weird lines in the sky - toxins have infiltrated all areas of our lives. And as dire as it may sound, there really is no escape.

None of us want to be ill or feeling under par, but unfortunately we've been conditioned and manipulated over the last few generations into allowing the likes of government, media and pharmaceutical companies to tell us what's best when it comes to our health and wellbeing.

Possibly the biggest mistake in the history of human evolution, given what's currently unfolding. But thankfully there is much that can be done if, as ever, we look beyond the accepted norm and take matters into our own hands.

There is an art to detoxing, because it happens in two parts: first, toxins must be released from the cells; then they need to exit the body. The art is in the flow - like pouring water through a funnel - pour too fast and the water backs up and overflows. In detox terms, this would mean getting rid of one problem and causing another, and this is possibly why many people give up before they've really got going.

Mastering the art involves using some methods/products that release toxicity from the cells and others which ensure the body's exit points are open and operating efficiently. Below are lists of both with a little information on each suggestion. My intention here is to give ideas which may or may not resonate with you, which you can research further if you feel called to.

To detox the cells:

- Limit your intake of toxins. Consider organic food, natural cleaning products & cosmetics. There are so many alternatives available now or you can even make your own to save on cost.
- Don't suppress acute illnesses. Your body knows what to do; e.g. a fever serves to thin the lymph to remove toxins & pathogens (the head can be kept cool with a flannel), and there are endless natural remedies to ease a multitude of symptoms & help the body release what it needs to.

Homeopathic pharmacies such as Helios sell various kits which you can then learn how to use for all kinds of first aid situations.

- Hydrate, hydrate, hydrate. The cornerstone of good health; this means water (2 litres a day) but also electrolyte balance. Magnesium is hugely lacking in the soil & therefore pretty much in all of us. In my view & experience, magnesium is the most significant supplement for humans in today's world. Also keeping the colon healthy with soothing, anti-inflammatory helpers such as aloe vera and linseed tea, as the colon determines much of our hydration level.
- Fasting/intermittent fasting. Food is important, yet demands a great deal of energy to process. During fasting periods, the body can get on with metabolising and repairing.
- Plenty of sleep, and leave a few hours between eating and going to bed.
- Listen to your body. If you feel rubbish after consuming gluten/sugar/alcohol/coffee/dairy or anything else, you don't have to wait for a professional to validate it for you - cut it out for a few weeks or months and see how you feel. We are generally becoming less tolerant to foods and drinks which are a challenge for the body to process, and leaving them out can often have a very powerful effect on our healing.

- There are many, many supplements, herbs, homeopathic and other natural remedies to aid detox. I can't list them all here, but a few of my favourites include turmeric (a potent anti-inflammatory), concentrated greens such as chlorella (highly cleansing - keeps grey hair at bay too!), zeolite clay (used internally or in the bath to attract toxins like a magnet and remove them from the body; great for mopping up radiation), zinc (fantastic adrenal and immune support; another important all-rounder), iodine (also great for radiation protection, thyroid health & general metabolism), and magnesium as mentioned above.

Once the toxins are released from the cells, to remove them from the body, look after these hardworking organs:

- Liver. The workhorse of detoxing. Castor oil packs are absolutely fantastic and can be used regularly for maintenance. Herbs such as dandelion and milk thistle are helpful too, as are concentrated greens and juices; particularly celery, and a squeeze of lemon in water first thing.

- Kidneys. Looking after the liver naturally protects the kidneys, as do hydration, electrolytes and pH balance. Also reducing stress. Fear is held in the kidneys and the adrenals sit on top of them, which release cortisol and adrenaline, associated with our flight or flight response.
- Lymph. The lymphatic system is like a cleansing river running through the body. It needs to flow well, so skin brushing keeps it moving, as does exercise and a healthy body temperature.
- Lungs. Many toxins are released through the breath, so it pays to breathe well. As obvious as it sounds, very few of us actually do it. Proper breathing also helps regulate the nervous system & hormonal balance. Castor oil packs are great for the lungs, and many people find salt pipes and neti pots helpful too.
- Blood. Juices, particularly celery, help to cleanse the blood. Exercise is important for healthy circulation, as is efficient breathing for proper oxygen exchange.
- Skin. Our largest organ and an easy way to remove toxins, as they bypass the internal organs. This is where baths come in; epsom salts (high in magnesium), Himalayan salts, clays & bicarbonate of soda to name a few. Also skin brushing to increase efficiency.
- Bowels. The all-important final gateway of the internal organs. We really don't want toxins sticking around in here too long as they'll be reabsorbed. Fibre is what we hear about the most, and it is important, although hydration is the key. Enemas and colonics can also be invaluable here, and I can't write about detoxing without including the words 'urine therapy', but I'm well aware these last two suggestions won't float everyone's boat, so on that note I'll leave it there!

Be sure to read up on any of the above that interest you before jumping in feet first.

Respect the elders

WHEN I was young I remember hearing people say, 'Respect your elders.' The saying seems to have fallen out of fashion, but why?

by BEN HUNT

The answer is that today's society is run by psychopaths, and psychopaths lack empathy. They are unable to put any value on other people's emotions, their love, their dreams and desires.

That's not to say we don't matter to the psychopaths. We do, but in their eyes our value only extends to how we benefit them. They appreciate it when we spend our lives working to pay our taxes into the state, which they can then raid and share amongst themselves thanks to the rigged political system.

When we are no longer productive members of society, then what value remains? That is why our elders are now portrayed as a burden to their families, their children, and to society at large.

They represent a net liability on the owners' balance sheet, and corporations cannot have that. To be sure, this 'society' that we think we belong to is now in its entirety a corporate enterprise. To the powers-that-shouldn't-be, these old folk are, in the words of Henry Kissinger, nothing but 'useless eaters'.

But is that the truth? As always, we should look to the way humans always lived for the majority of our time on Earth until the dawn of 'civilisation' that came with our shift to farming that only happened in the last few thousand years. For the vast majority of our existence, we didn't live in a massive, faceless society, but in hunter-gatherer tribes.

If we can get the clues to our true nature, how we were designed and how we are meant to live, then tribal life is our touchstone. What would have been the place of elders in that existence, where we thrived in intimate connection with the natural world, the seasons, the movements of the herds, and the transit of the heavens?

Before writing and libraries and universities and the Internet, where did we get our knowledge about how to survive, how to treat each other, and how to contemplate our place in the world?

From our elders. They may not have been able to wield a spear any longer, but they held in their memories the tribal lore, the totality of what everyone needed to know. Their stories reminded us how to hunt and fish and trap and gather, they could tell us which medicinal herbs and fungi could be used for healing, and which to avoid.

They were literally the fount of all our knowledge. While they could not serve the tribe with the strength of their arms, they contributed to the benefit of all with the wisdom of the lore, without which our tribes would have disintegrated. They deserved the utmost respect. So what happened?

Fast forward to the year 2020, when a memo was sent out to NHS trusts with a chilling and evil instruction. Because of the virus threat, it said, all geriatric patients from nursing homes could not be admitted for life-saving care that might keep them going for a few more weeks, months, or even years. They should be turned around and sent back.

The result was that, between March and June, sixty thousand more people than average died in England and Wales, the majority of whom were elderly.

Did our government throw these 'useless eaters' under the bus, and if so, why? For numbers, for statistics, to manufacture evidence to support a fictional narrative. That is how much our older people mean to these psychopaths.

Stepping back and looking at the big picture, the campaign against the elders is just one front of a wider war, which is against humanity - human nature at its core. They are waging war on our tribes.

Because our tribes did not only provide security and shelter, sustenance and support, love and laughter; our tribes were our connection to life itself, to the natural world. Our tribes, and the songs and stories that each generation carefully recalled and passed down, told us who we were, where we came from, and what our place is in this world was.

Since the agricultural revolution and the dawn of civilisation, those with enough drive and few enough scruples have depended on keeping the people — the ones who worked the fields and sweated in the workshops — dependent on them, on the land that they 'owned', the food they provided, so that meant we had to forget our ancient tribal lore and accept a bastardised alternative.

Look at how we discover our place in the great scheme of things today: we have no tribes, instead we have 'society'; this giant, faceless, soulless, unrecognisable entity.

In place of true, natural interdependency, we have collectivism, the idea that the needs and interests of any individual are less worthy than the needs and interests of the whole. Now, in a tribal context, that interdependency held true. When the tribe was strong, its members were strong; and when the members were strong, the tribe was strong.

But collectivism only works when you know the faces around the campfire. Today, we are being groomed that the collective is now embodied by an economy where we are doomed to slave away until we are of no longer use, while our quality of life drains away before our eyes and a small number of super-wealthy get ever richer.

We are told that every one of us is individually responsible for killing the Earth, if we don't trade in our cars for electric alternatives, stop burning wood to keep ourselves warm, and stop eating our ancestral, local, seasonal diet. We are all guilty and we should all feel ashamed.

What's more, the scum in charge are now telling us that, thanks to waves of new, invisible, global threats, our only chance of survival is to accept a single worldwide civilisation, which of course means a single worldwide governance — a new world order.

So now, in place of our elders, look to men in white coats to tell us how to be healthy; to men in wigs to tell us how to treat others properly; to men in dresses to tell us what to believe; to a national curriculum to educate us in how to find our own individual place in the world; and to mass media to tell us what is happening right in front of us.

With this visceral disconnection from reality, is it any wonder so many are suffering from a profound, existential malaise, turning to addictions and pharmaceuticals just to get through each day?

Because, by losing touch with our lore, we have really been removed — by force — from the sure knowledge of where we belong, of who we truly are, and what it means to be a human. We have been wrenched from the bosom of our ancestral heritage and attached to the plastic teat of the corporation.

Now you can understand why they had to go after the elders.

They represent our link to our own roots, and of course they are just one of the scum's strategic targets, along with anything else that keeps us human... the family, parents, faith, even something as essentially human as sex and gender!

Nothing is sacred to these scum, these psychopaths. You and I do not matter... well, maybe for a little longer, while we are still paying our taxes, mortgages, and credit card repayments.

They are not just coming for the old folk, they are coming for us all. That is why we must stand for our elders, because they are — in the most literal sense — us.

So let's take a stand. Let's sit and listen. Let's bring them into our homes, our lives, our hearts. Let's respect our elders, and teach our young ones why it matters so much.

If you are not old now, I pray that you get to be, and I pray that once you get there, there will be those ready to sit and listen to your stories, and, if necessary, to stand and fight for you.

Letters to TheLIGHT

Got something to say? Outraged that this paper exists? Want to praise us for being the only widely circulated newspaper giving a voice to the alternative, the censored, the cancelled and the forgotten? Love the paper, but have to disagree with one article? Email: letters@thelightpaper.co.uk

DEAR The Light,

Richard House drew our attention to how governments and corporations distract, manipulate and exploit through football (The Light issue 28, p6).

He also pointed out some emotional benefits. Nevertheless, football is still the best vehicle for ordinary folk to understand themselves, understand how to interact with team mates and opponents, and experience the world interacting with them - on all levels from physical, emotional, mental and spiritual.

Most players have lucky grounds. If they investigated the real cause they would happen upon astrocartography. Most players have lucky numbers. If they investigated the real cause they would happen upon numerology.

If fans should actively wonder why there are 11-a-side, they would find out that 22 is the Master number in Numerology. There are 22 major cards in Tarot. There are 22 paths to Self Realisation in Kabbala. Perhaps noting the decision to have 22 players in a game was taken at the Freemasons Tavern, London, in 1863.

Alan Ayre

DEAR The Light,

I have been saying for years that we needed a newspaper that only has truthful and meaningful content, and that all the big alternative media presenters should invest in a newspaper so big that it could not just be given a quick glance but a fair chance.

Your paper not only fulfilled those aforementioned requirements but surpassed my expectations, because I deliver 500 a month to not only local businesses but to different houses, so that everyone in my area has the opportunity to at least make their own decisions after reading it. I would deliver a lot more if I had them, so I am writing to local businesses in the hope of sponsorship to buy more.

I have noticed a big difference in how The Light is now being received by local businesses and citizens alike. First there was only one or two who showed any kind of interest, now there are only one or two who still won't look.

I have been delivering to undertakers and florists in my area with very little feedback until around four months ago, when I told one of them to stop lying to me and I told them about what I was canvassing about - all the research over the last eight years my wife and I had been doing - and how no-one with any hint of power would give me the time of day, despite the mountain of evidence that I showed them.

I got a break that day, because she finally opened up about the excess deaths; no need to guess that the police wouldn't listen - I have been rejected fifty-two times from the station - or the doctors who have had so much correspondence from me that they now refuse to reply, though I still deliver the paper to each section in the surgery.

My point is that the main freedom channels should be advertising The Light as you are the only one, and I will be writing to them to ask promotion of the best newspaper in the UK (I haven't even looked at a newsrag for many years).

I thank you all for the work you have done, and are doing for everyone, especially those who either refuse to even look at the so-called alternative media (the real media), or engage in any dialogue without resorting to the usual name-calling or slander (most are too cowardly to face the truth). They will thank you one day.

KEEP ROCKING THE BOAT FOLKS,

Keith McCardle

DEAR The Light,

In response to Issue 26, P8 'Take the fight against 5G to your local council' and all other articles highlighting take to council / MPs:

Emailing your local representative sounds like something I would see in mainstream media. I understand the common sense of contacting MPs, as we are supposedly in a democracy and they are voted in by us the people and paid from our taxes to represent us.

However, in reality I am sure many readers can agree this isn't always the case (example: issue 26, P3)

In my experience, MPs ignore emails, send back their personal opinion, or even worse, list the positives.

"We no longer have the time to point fingers at chemical companies or blame our politicians. We simply don't have time. The shift and solution reside within us. We need to reinvent the way we function as human beings to move toward truth and solutions." - Zach Bush

We the people must take responsibility ourselves to actually get the job done. When was the last time a local representative actually made a change you requested (unless it was easy)?

With careers, reputation and pay packets to protect, the higher aim of protecting citizens is lost. The only change I recall is when the people have driven popular change in communities, not these professional pen-pushers

Overall, I see the attraction in taking easy steps like email MPs/councillors and thus putting responsibility over to them, but it shouldn't be the only step - we shouldn't expect results and it shouldn't be the full stop.

Government employees and companies are just doing their jobs - protecting profits; and we have to do ours - protect our children and our health.

Sapphire Macdonald

DEAR The Light,

I read Lance Peatling's piece in issue 28 on how the Declaration of Rights (1688) and the 1700 Act of Settlement protect the people's rights.

There are many well-meaning people in recent times promoting various strategies on how men and women can use ancient laws to protect their rights. Sadly, none of them seem to work when it comes to the enforcement of these rights in the courts. You only have to observe how those in authority who have committed many heinous crimes recently remain at large, entirely unconcerned about attempts to hold them to account.

The reason is that all these rights only have meaning if they can be enforced. Repeatedly, we have seen how the legal system at all levels is not there to enforce the rights of the people, but to protect powerful vested interests from the people.

Parliament is in the same category. If it ever was a champion of the people's rights, it long ago ceased to be so and, like the legal system, it is now there to protect the same vested interests.

You only have to look at who Members of Parliament, senior judges and police officers pledge allegiance to, in order to appreciate how the system is stacked against 'we the people'.

The solution? All these corrupt institutions must be swept away if the people are ever to triumph.

Willie Methven

DEAR The Light,

It is nothing short of miraculous that The Light exists.

I do not own a TV and can no longer even buy a newspaper, because they all propagate variations on the same themes, mostly based on fear, and increasingly, coercion.

It is truly disheartening to see such a plethora of lies constantly served out on all mainstream media outlets, relentlessly. We are observing the mass destruction of humanity in front of our very eyes.

I am grateful to come across a newspaper which is an antidote to all this, and which provides many of us with truthful, objective discussions and information.

It is an act of courage in these dangerous times.

SOCIAL REFORMATION

Money creation,

...etcetera, please go to www.theprospectofbabel.com

Note to reader: The Prospect of Babel outlines a concept-polity, the purpose of which is to act as an index for social transition. As such, it is open to revision, modification, moderation and so on (welcoming correction on every level, while inviting others to refine it – which renders the reader, in part, the writer, or leastwise the righter via critical reading).

In respect of the text, there's three errors a reader, however clever, may make, to wit: to mistake the narrator for a dictator, and see what's propositional as prescriptive; to read what's stylised as literal; to perceive as radical what's actually pragmatic (by virtue of timescale, analysis, and open-minded trial) – to iterate, the document is not a blueprint for a utopia (more of an ideal that invites dialogue).

Please note also that it's written in blank verse – so blank in fact that you may not at first discern it (its form not affecting its legibility, though a reader may note an apparent over-use of commas – this seeming error stemming from the investment of metre [viz. if spoken, it has rhythms]). To this end most of the commas are optional (being formal more than grammatical devices).

KNIGHTS BULLION

Why do you see us advertising with The Light newspaper?

We are part of your community. We have marched, we have stood next to many of you in the parks. We have seen the misinformation from the mainstream media and how it has affected and damaged people. They have divided families and pushed many to financial breaking point through fear.

Our journey has taken us from a business which was closed unlawfully, to an 'essential service' bullion merchant, with accounts that include some of the largest names in precious metals.

We are very proud to be serving our community.

Our aim is to guide buyers to the correct precious metal products to suit their needs and circumstances.

Our team will give you honest and professional advice on how to safeguard your wealth, and help direct you to the correct solution tailored to your requirements.
